CORP

Crafting Homes
for Generations™

Beyond Years, Across Generations

Everyone looks at Kumar Corp as a trusted developer that is focused on structures and features. But there is something far more personal that the brand really cares about. It brings out the brand's human side in a way that also reveals its values in a meaningful way.

Video-01

The film opens in black and white. We see a gramophone kept on a table. The screen is grainy like how videos used to look in the old days. Someone passes by the gramophone completely covering it and this becomes a cue for the transition. The scene now changes to the 90s era. We see a simple cassette player on the table. The film now has a sepia tone. Once more, someone passes by the cassette player and the scene transitions. We are now in a more modern setting. The cassette player is replaced by a modern music system with bigger speakers.

Super appears at the end:

Video-02

A rotary dial phone is on a table. We hear the sound effect of the number being manually dialed. A figure passes and the scene shifts to the 90s.

A sturdy push-button landline sits on the table. We hear the dial tone of the phone. Another pass by transition takes us to today. A modern cordless phone sits on the table. Once more a figure passes and we transition to a mobile phone on the table.

Video-03

1960s style bulky TV with rounded edges and static flickering in black and white. Someone passes by and the scene transitions.

1990s box TV with buttons now in colour. A figure passes by and the scene transitions again. We see a slim LED TV mounted neatly on the wall in a modern living room setup.
